

Human Rights Summer Fellowships

Experience a Life-changing internship with the Handa Center

The Handa Center offers several paid summer fellowship opportunities for students interested in human rights and international justice, in collaboration with campus partners such as the Stanford Global Studies Division and the Haas Center for Public Service. Placements ensure students have meaningful, applied research and work opportunities to inform their studies and future career pathways.

Internship and fellowship placements are a key component of the Handa Center's efforts to complement classroom teachings with practical training and career guidance for students interested in protecting and promoting human rights.

Stipends of up to $7,000 are available to students who work full-time for a minimum of nine weeks during the summer quarter. Applications are due in early February and placements qualify for Cardinal Quarter.

Stanford WSD HANDA Center for Human Rights & International Justice

For more information, contact:

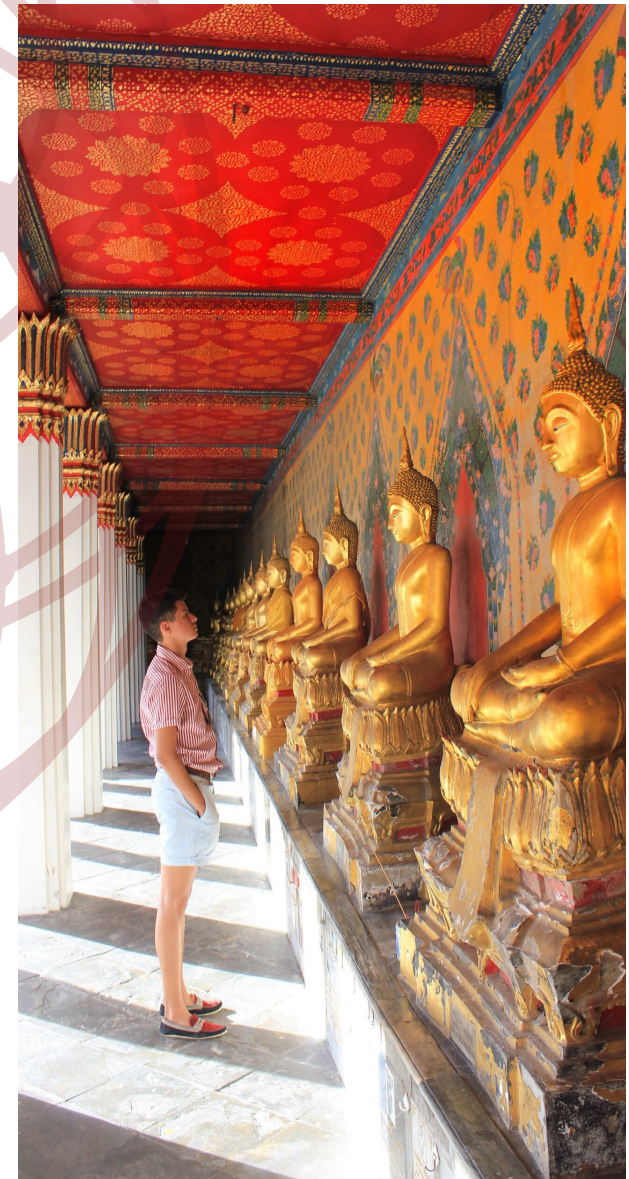

Penelope Van Tuyl Associate Director

Jessie Brunner Senior Program Manager

handacenter@stanford.edu
+1 (650) 736-7622

208 Encina Hall West
Stanford, CA 94305

handacenter.stanford.edu

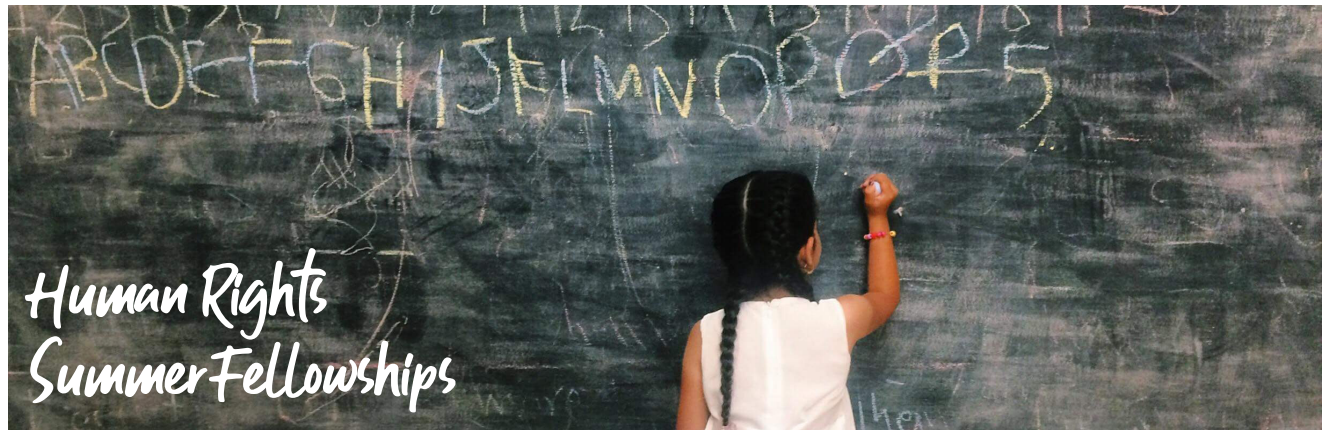

Student Testimonials

“This experience has and will play an instrumental role in starting my career as this type of work is exactly what I hope to be doing in the coming years.”

“This was my most meaningful summer experience from my four years of college. I feel even more certain about the field I want to work in, and above all, feel so confident in my ability to be self-sufficient.”

“My summer as a Human Rights Fellow single-handedly changed how I view the world and my role in it; I am and will be forever grateful for the opportunities the Handa Center has offered me.”

“I think the experience probably had a bigger impact on me than I had on others. I do feel as though my contributions helped both the organization as a whole and the individuals I was working with, but the summer also helped me think about my career goals in a more concrete way than I had before. I was also inspired by the people I worked with, and learned so much from the clients themselves.”

Human Rights Summer Fellowships

The Human Rights Summer Fellowships offer students the opportunity to make a valuable contribution to the field by addressing a pressing local challenge or effecting positive social change. Students select the summer experience that best fits their needs—either connecting with an organization of their choosing for relevant professional experience, or spending the summer engaging in community-based research. The Center can work with students to cement their placements based on discrete thematic or geographic preferences.

Cambodia and Brazil Summer Fellowships

The Stanford Global Studies Internship Program places students in Phnom Penh, Cambodia, where they contribute to Handa Center research and transitional justice programs in partnership with international and Cambodian NGOs. The exact nature of placements varies from year to year, but interns typically do work related to proceedings at the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia as well as working on curation and public outreach at the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum.

The Children's Rights Brazil Summer Fellowships allows students to spend the summer in Brazil working on children's rights with a local partner of their own choosing. Students are asked to partner directly with a governmental, multilateral, or non-profit organization, or the corporate social responsibility wing of a for-profit business to work on promotion, monitoring, evaluation, or implementation of children's rights.